

Ken likes to describe his team members as having a "doer attitude," which is part of why this overachiever loves the people and culture at RPI Consultants.

Relatively new to RPI Consultants, Ken Cikanovich has been a valuable and easy addition to the PMO. He credits this transition to the team and attitudes around him. "The culture here is above and beyond expectations," Ken says. "Everyone I work with is committed to bringing the best possible solutions to the table." In this way, he sees his primary goal as bringing the right consultants to solve the unique challenges on each project.

Having the Client's Best Interest at Heart

Ken knows that being a Project Manager sometimes means preparing clients for tough conversations, but he doesn't really worry about how they might be received. "I know that our team always operates with our clients' best interests in mind," Ken explains, "and I think our clients see that, too. So even when we don't always have an easy answer, they know we're going to work on finding the best possible solution."

Background & Experiences

Ken comes to RPI with tremendous experience gained from performing a lot of different roles in a lot of diverse industries; everything from transportation to financial services to digital currencies. Ever the overachiever, he also continues to seek education and certifications, including a Bachelor of Arts in Management Information Systems, his PMP certification, and is a Six Sigma Green Belt. Luckily for RPI, Ken also brings significant project management and Infor Deployment Method experience.

Downtime Pursuits

When he's not busy managing projects or earning his next certification, Ken is mostly a family man and enjoys things like golfing, hiking, sailing, and running. Recently, he's also become rather skilled at home improvement projects, including a deck upgrade to give him a little more space to grill and enjoy a few home-brewed beers!
